There are many tools to capture your screen and tools to translate that image, but none of them are able to do the entire process easily. While it is possible to manually take a screenshot and upload it to a translation software such as Google Lens, this can be a tedious process, especially if you need to do it multiple times in quick succession. You would also need to manage the screenshots that you took which adds a little more extra unnecessary effort. It would be more convenient if this whole process could be done automatically at the push of a button.
